Research Interest

The present research interests are focused on new strategies in synthesis of nanomaterials, nanopatterning and nanodevice fabrication including of molecular systems. The recipes emphasize the importance of simple design, near ambient working conditions, solution based processing as well as low cost instrumentation. Our group strives to translate nanoresearch finding into affordable technology.

We have made contributions in many areas- nanomaterials, developing nanotools and prototype device fabrication, molecular systems and their properties etc. There is a concrete underlying theme, which makes the contributions unique. We have employed solid-state chemistry principles to nanomaterial synthesis which paved way, for the first time, to direct patterning by various lithography tools. Thus, the potential of metal-organic precursors as single source precursors for patterned synthesis of a variety of nanomaterials has been realized which has been applied effectively in e-beam lithography and soft molding. The functionality of the patterned materials is clearly demonstrated in prototype devices such as sensors. This is a fine example of chemistry applied to high-end device research.
