Royal Society International Collaboration Awards –Call for Applications

The Royal Society has opened a call for applications for International Collaboration Awards which will provide funding for newly independent researchers who are building their own group in the UK and South Africa and Least Developed Countries to jointly develop international research collaborations. Researchers can apply for funds of up to £225,000 for three years. Projects must be ODA-eligible.

The scheme aims to support the development of sustainable and mutually beneficial collaborative partnerships; generate original research; and build the capacity of newly independent researchers and their groups to conduct, manage, share and apply high quality research through sharing of knowledge, skills and exchange of people.

The deadline for applications is: 25 June 2024
